

DIES IN FRANKFORT GRAIN OFFICE

Eight Cars Wrecked In Fog

Eight automobiles figured in a general crack up at the foot of the bridge on Southwest Highway at Chicago Ridge Thursday night. Due to a low hanging cloud of smoke from a burning peat bog nearby and fog visibility at the foot of the bridge was almost nil. Two cars had bumped together at this particular point at the foot of the bridge. George Yunker of Orland Park crashed into them. There was no fog on top of the bridge and Mr. Yunker did not see the other cars until he was too close to stop. He had hardly stopped before another car crashed into the rear of his automobile. Mr. Yunker grabbed a flashlight and was going to the top of the bridge to stop oncoming traffic and just as he was about to open the door of his car, another automobile from the Sheriff's Office of Cook County crashed into the side of the Yunker car. Had Mr. Yunker stepped out of his car a second sooner he might have been killed. He went to the top of the bridge and started signalling oncoming traffic to stop with his flashlight. A car driven by a young man approached at a high rate of speed but the driver was unable to stop his car and crashed into the already damaged sheriff's car. Police finally stopped other cars from adding to the pileup. Luckily no one was seriously injured. Mrs. Yunker was thrown against the windshield of the car she was riding in and sustained bruises about the head. Riding with the Yunkers were Mrs. Yunker's sister and her husband. The accident occurred about 10:30 P. M.

Hirsch Brothers Opening Beautiful Funeral Home

Carl and Edwin Hirsch former Mokena boys, who entered the undertaking business a few years ago in Chicago Heights in partnership with Frank Herbst under the firm name of The West End Funeral Home have been so successful in their field that they have been obliged to seek larger and newer quarters. They have just finished one of the most beautiful funeral homes in the middle west in Chicago Heights. The new establishment is located at 1340 Otto Boulevard corner 14th St. and the Hirsch Brothers and Mr. Herbst will conduct an open house of the new funeral home Saturday and Sunday October 28th and 29th, and extend an invitation to all their friends and the public in general to attend.

Here are a few of the outstanding features to be found in the new mortuary: oil painted murals on the walls. There is only one other mortuary which has similar murals and that one is located in Hollywood, Calif. Most modern equipped preparation rooms in the entire middle west. Air conditioned thruout. Private powder rooms for the ladies and smoking rooms for the men. Wick's custom built pipe organ. Private family room. Elevator service. The home has a seating capacity of 250 persons and still has a home effect. The floors thruout are richly carpeted with antique gold carpet.

Hirsch Bros., in addition to the West End Funeral Home in Chicago Heights also operate a funeral parlor in Tinley Park.

Mokena PTA Halloween Party

October 31st is Halloween. You telling me? November 1st is the Mokena P. T. A. date for a buncle party. I'm telling you don't miss it.

An evening of fun is being planned so come out and roll those bones. There will be buncle for children and adults. Prizes will be given to both. The games will start promptly at eight o'clock. Several kinds of refreshments will be served. Those of you on a diet will get off easy, but those of you who enjoy good eats, well you had better bring a few extra nickles with you.

Mokena M. E. Aid To Hold Bazaar

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church of Mokena will give their annual Bazaar and Supper November 9th in St. John's Evangelical church basement. More details will be given next week.

Preparing For Opening of Live Stock Show

Predictions that all previous records for number of entries will be broken are made by the management of the International Live Stock Exposition for this year's show, which will be held at the Chicago Stock Yards December 2 to 9.

According to B. H. Heide, secretary-manager of the exposition, the early entry is the heaviest it has ever been and more than the usual number of stockmen have made inquiries relative to listing exhibits.

$100,000 In Prizes
More than $100,000 will be awarded to stockmen in cash prizes. The premiums will be spread over competition for 30 different breeds of cattle, horses, sheep and swine, which will total well over 12,000 head.

An unusually large showing of Canadian live stock is expected this year, officials of the show state, owing to the cancellation of the Fall Fairs in Canada this year. In recent years, all provinces of the Dominion have been strongly represented in both the livestock and crops divisions of the exposition.

Entries for the purebred and individual fat stock classes of the exposition will be accepted until November 1st, he says; and for the International Grain and Hay Show, the largest annual showing of corn, small grain, seeds and hay in the country, exhibits may be entered until November 20.

Distant Lands Exhibit
Among the first entries to be received for this year's crops show are samples of wheat from Argentina and Australia, the latter consisting of first prize winning wheat from the Sidney agricultural show last Spring. It will be the first time that South America will be represented.

The Exposition will be staged in the huge International Amphitheatre, situated at the east entrance to the Chicago Stock Yards. It includes a central coliseum with seats for 7,500 and adjoining display areas encompassing six acres.

To Hold Teachers Examination

Examinations for teachers' certificates will be held on Thursday and Friday, November 9 and 10, 1939, beginning at 8:30 A. M. in the County Superintendent of Schools' office in the Court House in Joliet.

Three examinations are held each year. The dates for the 1940 examinations are March 7 and 8, July 11 and 12, and November 7 and 8.

Persons desiring specific information in regard to obtaining teachers' certificates by examination may obtain same by contacting the State Superintendent of Public Instruction or the office of the Will County Superintendent of Schools.

The general requirements for admission to the teachers examinations are: That the applicant be a graduate of a recognized high school. That a minimum of thirty semester hours of college work is necessary if the applicant is to take the examination for a special or limited elementary certificate. That sixty semester hours of college work are required for the limited state high school certificate.

Wave of Petty Thievery Reported

A wave of petty thieving has been going on in Mokena the past week. The Mokena Oil Co., office and store house which has been burglarized quite frequently this year, was again entered Monday night. Entrance was gained by battering down a door. A small amount of money was reported stolen.

The same night The News-Bulletin office was robbed of a small amount of change. Entrance was gained thru a rear window. The Kenneth Brown residence on Front street has been robbed twice of late.

One Killed When Car Skids On Wet Pavement

An automobile in which six colored people from Joliet were riding, skidded on a wet pavement on the Southwest Highway near Marley Wednesday night and was ditched. All of the occupants of the car were injured, one so critically that he died Thursday morning, crushing chest injuries causing death.

Minstrel Rehearsal

Rehearsals are going on each week for the big minstrel show which the Mokena Civic Association is planning to stage the early part of January. Watch for more particulars.

D. A. R. To Dedicate Memorial Boulder At Mokena Armistice Day

The General Henry Dearborn Chapter of the D. A. R., of Chicago who became vitally interested in the Mokena Memorial Cemetery and especially in marking the grave of Charles Denney, a Revolutionary War soldier, have perfected arrangements and plans for erecting a memorial boulder at the site of the grave with befitting dedication services on Saturday afternoon, November 11th, Armistice Day at 2 o'clock.

The boulder which is a gift of the chapter above mentioned will bear the following inscription:

CHARLES DENNEY
Born in Pauldingtown, Duchess County, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1759. Died in Will County, Ill., Aug. 6, 1839. Served in the Revolutionary War under Captain Noah Wheeler, Col. Roswell Hopkin's Regiment, Duchess County, N. Y. Troops.

Erected by General Henry Dearborn Chapter D. A. R.
Theodore Haertle of River Forest

Falls To Death Beneath Wheels of Freight Train

The engineer of the Rock Island west bound suburban passenger train due in Tinley Park at noon discovered the mangled body of a colored man lying on the west bound track a mile east of Tinley Tuesday. The Coroner's office was notified and the body was removed to the county morgue. There was nothing in the clothes by which to identify the dead man who appeared to be about forty years old. In one pocket 11 cents was found.

A west bound freight had preceded the passenger train and it is presumed the victim was riding the bumpers and fell off in some manner to his death beneath the wheels of the fast moving train.

New Frankfort Pastor Has Seen Much of Europe

Rev. Rudolf Malek, the new Methodist minister in Frankfort is no stranger to the Frankfort community as he served as District Supt., in this vicinity some eight years ago. He comes from a very successful six years ministry in Aurora, Illinois, where Mrs. Rev. Mina L. Malek was Supt. of Jennings Seminary, a Boarding High School for Girls for six years.

Rev. Malek is an active Kiwanian, leader of civic affairs and was for years on an executive council of the Boy Scouts in Chicago and Aurora. He is a former missionary and both he and Mrs. Malek are regarded as outstanding speakers on missionary topics.

Rev. Mr. Malek has travelled around the world repeatedly and recently covered some ten thousand miles alone in Siberia and Russia among other trips hunting big game in Africa or with the Japanese army in Manchuko. He is a lecturer who conducted forums at campuses of State Universities, Colleges and all manner of clubs all over the middle west.

He attended several Olympic games and has spoken before the largest High School crowds in the country.

Rev. and Mrs. Malek expect to have a happy ministry here in this community and are ready to cooperate in any enterprise to make it a better and more Christian place to live in. They already appreciate the fine spirit of welcome extended to them by not only the churches, but also individuals of Frankfort and vicinity.

Annual Red Cross Drive Opens In Mokena

Officers of the local chapter of the American Red Cross are making ready for the annual drive for funds here in Mokena. The drive will begin on Armistice Day, November 11, and will continue through the month of November. A number of volunteer workers will visit each home to receive donations in any amount given. One dollar and over entitles a person to a membership in the Red Cross. Fifty cents of every one dollar subscription is sent to the general treasury of the Red Cross; the balance is used for relief work in Mokena. Ten per cent of all smaller donations is sent to the general treasury also.

Conditions in Europe are making extra heavy demands on the Red Cross. Every nation in need receives help. Rumors have spread that Germany is not receiving the services of the Red Cross. This rumor is unfounded. Germany has been asked to send in her needs with regard to the wounded and the homeless at home and in war stricken Poland. The Red Cross takes no sides in any war. This institution exists for those in need, no matter what race, creed, or color. At the present time Germany has asked for nothing except for the needs of the Poles in the conquered areas.

Your help in the present needs of a war-sick world is earnestly sought.

Orland Couple Hurt In Auto Crash

A car coming out of a side street crashed into the side of a car driven by Charles Hahenlein well known contractor of Orland Park at Burr Oak in Blue Island Thursday night. The crash threw Mrs. Hahenlein out of the car. She sustained a broken shoulder, probably internal injuries and cuts and bruises. She was removed to the St. Francis hospital, in Blue Island where she is still a patient. Mr. Hahenlein suffered only slight injuries. The car was badly wrecked.

Mokena Woman's Athletic Club Notes

What fun we have
At our Thursday meeting.
We stretch and bend
And there is no cheating.

We have more fun
Running the bases,
You should see the expression
On the managers' faces.

Then there's Volley Ball
And Archery too.
So won't you ladies come out
And see what you can do?

Won't you ladies come and join the Women's Athletic club? We certainly have been having a good time every Thursday night. The schedule has been arranged as follows:

7:30 to 8:00—Exercises.
8:00 to 8:45—Volley Ball and Soft Ball alternated each week.
8:45 to 9:30—Archery.

Mr. Ridderg of Tinley Park is instructing the group in Archery.

ORLAND FIRE CHIEF SAVES WOMAN'S LIFE

Last Saturday morning Lloyd Cowan, Orland Park rural mail carrier came upon an auto accident on Keane Ave., near 135th street in which two women from Wisconsin were involved. A crowd had collected and plans were made to raise the ditched car with a chain attached to a truck. It was discovered that one of the women was wedged in the car and that to raise the car by force would mean her death. Mr. Cowan rushed to Orland Park and reported the case to Fire Chief John Helenhouse who is in charge of the Red Cross First Aid Station. Chief Helenhouse upon arrival found the car lying on its side. He got in the car and managed to extricate the woman and gave her the Red Cross First Aid. Dr. S. S. Leavitt of Orland Park was summoned and the injured woman was taken to the St. Francis hospital in Blue Island. She had suffered a broken hip, broken jaw, head injuries and a deep gash on the right leg. Her companion escaped injury.

From what could be learned the car was traveling at a high rate of speed and ran off the pavement on to the shoulder of the highway. Without slowing up the driver tried to swing back on the pavement but struck a rough spot which caused the car to get out of control. It ran across the pavement and struck a bank of earth. The car was badly smashed. The prompt and efficient aid rendered by Chief Helenhouse is said to have saved the woman's life. Physicians think she will recover.

3 Autos Crash

Three automobiles, one from Chicago, one from Lockport and one from Joliet collided at the intersection of Wolf Road and 159th st. at 7:30 o'clock Monday morning. Failure to regard the stop sign is believed to have caused the triple collision. No one was injured, but the cars were damaged.

Thanksgiving Party

A Thanksgiving card and poultry party will be sponsored by the New Lenox Band at the New Lenox school gym on November 17th. Pinocle, buncle and euchre will be played and there will be prizes. The door prize will be a turkey.

Two Basketball Games Sunday

Sunday, October 29th two basketball games will be played in the Mokena school gym. The Mokena Alumni lights and heavies will play the Sonners lights and heavies from Joliet. These games will be the first to be played in Mokena this season. The first game will start at 2:30 p. m., and two very interesting and exciting games are in store for those fans attending.

The Mokena Alumni teams will have practice games Friday, October 27th and Tuesday, October 31st at 7:30 p. m.

Prominent Resident of Frankfort Seized With Heart Attack

Herman Tewes, aged 70 years, well known resident of Frankfort, was seized with a sudden stroke of apoplexy while in the office of the Frankfort Grain Company Tuesday morning about ten o'clock and died almost instantly.

He was born in Hanover, Germany November 26, 1869. He received his education in the schools of his native land. He was confirmed in 1884. In the year 1887 he immigrated to America and located in Green Garden Township.

December 30, 1896 he was united in marriage with Miss Helena Janssen. They resided on a farm in Green Garden Township until 1910 when they retired from the farm and located in Frankfort where they have since resided.

To this union three sons and two daughters were born, of whom one daughter died in 1926.

Surviving are the widow, three sons, Harry, Bernhard and Emil; one daughter, Mrs. Alma Haake; seven grand children and one brother who resides in Germany.

Mrs. Tewes has been seriously ill the past six months and is just able to be out of bed.

Funeral services will be conducted Friday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock from the late home to the St. Peter's Evangelical church in Frankfort at two o'clock. Burial will be made in the Pleasant Hill Cemetery, Frankfort.

All Roads To Mardi Gras

All roads will lead to Frankfort this Friday and Saturday night to the Mardi Gras festival to be staged by the Frankfort Civic Club in the new Frankfort School Gym. There will be fun and frolic for all. On Saturday night there will be a Mardi Gras parade, the participants being in costume and masks. The same night a dance will be held at the gym. Those appearing unmasked will be charged a small extra fee. Everyone invited to come to Frankfort and have a gay time.

Getting Air Minded

The youngsters around New Lenox are taking keen interest in aeronautics and many have joined a local group engaged in making and flying model airplanes, some of which are operated with tiny gasoline motors. Robert Willette and Melvin Whittaker have been making model planes. Some of these planes attain quite an altitude and glide for a long distance after the gasoline in the motor has been consumed. Last Sunday a good sized model plane was sent up by Mr. Willette and after a long flight the plane dropped down and has not been located since.

Rocket Crew Finds Dead Man

The crew of the west bound Rock Island Rocket found a body of man lying on the track a mile west of Blue Island Wednesday evening at about 6:15 o'clock. There was nothing on the body or in the clothes to establish the identity of the victim.

World War Turned U. S. Into Saboteur's Utopia; Will It Happen Again?

By PARKER ELDRIDGE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

NEW YORK.—There are many good arguments for repeal of the embargo against arms shipments to belligerents in the European war. Maybe this is an argument to retain the embargo:

Should the United States try selling munitions abroad as in the World war, would another plague of terrorism raise havoc with our industrial production?

Searching newspaper files from the 1914-16 period, history students find that America's attempt to aid Great Britain and France in their last war brought a rash of general sabotage, the responsibility for which was usually placed on the Central Powers' doorstep.

Reads Like Fiction.

In the 32 months while America tried with one hand to remain neutral and with the other to help her European friends, there were scores of munition plant explosions, attempts were made to dynamite trains and bridges, spy plots were uncovered almost daily (often snarling folks in high places), assassinations were attempted and at least one effort was made to get the United States involved in a war with Mexico.

One chap, a Chicago school teacher named Frank Holt, alias Erich Muentner, tried on July 2, 1915, to blow up the capitol building at Washington. The next day he tried to kill J. Pierpont Morgan at his home in Glen Cove, Long Island.

Dumba Sent Home.

Many of the plots were strange as fiction and were traced to the highest diplomatic representatives of Austria and Germany. On August 30, 1915, a sensation was created by seizure and publication of VON IGEL—On April 19, 1916, the United States government seized papers of Wolf von Igel, former secretary to von Papen. The state department later said the papers disclosed a spy system financing a bureau to stir up labor troubles in munitions plants and to finance propaganda.

an official letter from Constantin Dumba, ambassador from Austria-Hungary. The letter disclosed he planned "to disorganize and hold up for months, if not entirely prevent, manufacture of munitions in Bethlehem, Pa., and the Middle West, which, in opinion of the German attaché, is of great importance and amply outweighs expenditure of money involved."

A few days later Ambassador Dumba was recalled and the government began investigating the unnamed "German attaché." In December Germany was asked to recall Capt. Franz von Papen (now a high Nazi and ambassador to Russia) and Captain Boy-Ed, for "improper activities in military and naval matters."

DUMBA—Constantin T. Dumba, Austria-Hungary's ambassador to the United States, whose recall was demanded by President Wilson after seizure of a letter he wrote, disclosing plans to "disorganize... manufacture of munitions... which, in opinion of the German attaché, is of great importance and amply outweighs expenditure of money involved."

EVERYBODY'S WOE

Food Goes Up, but Not Farm Prices; Here's Why, Says One Market Boss

NEW YORK.—It's not the greedy middleman nor the selfish consumer who forces the American farmer to accept a pauper's profit on the produce from his land.

Blame it on the "dead end" of agriculture, the typical metropolitan market place where swift-moving fruits and vegetables run against a stone-wall of waste, confusion and spoilage.

That, at least, is the opinion of William Fellowes Morgan Jr., New York city's commissioner of markets, who's trying to "forge an alliance between the man with the plow and the woman with the market basket."

Writing in the current issue of Country Home magazine, Morgan places the hot poker of distribution waste firmly against metropolitan markets. It's not a deliberate plot that causes the farmer to get back as little as 15 cents from the consumer's grocery dollar, he says. It's simply that city markets throughout the country are "illegally equipped, clogged up and handicapped with wasteful practices which cost millions of dollars yearly."

New York Guides Food Prices.

Discussing New York, which annually buys a billion dollars' worth of fresh food, enough milk to keep the navy afloat and enough fruits and vegetables to sink it, Morgan points out that market quotations throughout the nation are affected directly or indirectly by the daily Manhattan quotations. New York prices, in turn, will remain exorbitant until the bottleneck of inefficient handling is transformed into a smooth-working market system.

"I have wandered amidst the midnight uproar on our Hudson river waterfront, watching the goods arrive. I have followed crates, boxes and barrels from boats, trucks and freight cars until they rolled into the thunderous traffic snarls of West street. I have watched buyers and sellers, truckmen and wagon drivers, and freight handlers of every kind running over one another, like folks trying to get out of a burning grandstand at a county fair. I have seen men lug crates on their backs for blocks... because they could find no room to park their vehicles at the places where the goods were unloaded."

Manhattan Reforms.

New York has made a start in solving the problem with its new Bronx terminal, a model market which other cities may soon be copying because Manhattan's confusion is duplicated in most other large population centers. New York has also taken market peddlers off the streets and placed them in city-controlled centers where stall rents are kept at a minimum. Market industry and other related activities." Propaganda and subornation of American writers and lecturers was also financed by the "agency," it was alleged.

Recall 'Black Tom' Case.

In 1917, while pro-war sentiment was mounting swiftly in the face of repeated bombings, two west coast German consulate officials were convicted of conspiring to injure American shipping, railroad trains, bridges and munitions.

That same year, on January 12, occurred two history-making explosions. At Kingsland, N. J., a munitions plant of the Canadian Car & Foundry company was destroyed at a loss of $16,000,000. Nearby, at Haskell, N. J., an explosion of 400,000 pounds of powder in a duPont plant was felt in four states.

The Kingsland explosion and destruction of ammunition trains at Black Tom, N. J., on July 30, 1916, are still in the news. The latter sabotage killed four men and resulted in a loss of $45,000,000. Only this year a special United States tribunal placed responsibility for these explosions on Germany's shoulders and demanded payment.

Mexican Aid Sought.

In February, 1917, the United States published a note from German Foreign Secretary Zimmermann proposing a German-Mexican alliance for which Mexico would be paid by annexation of southwestern American states. It was later revealed that many German spies headquartered in Mexico and that both the Black Tom and Kingsland explosions may have been plotted there.

The year 1915 was a banner one for the saboteurs. Explosions were almost a daily event. At least 21 were recorded during the year. In a period of three months the duPont plant at Carney's Point, N. J., suffered three explosions which destroyed a mixing house, stillhouse and two other buildings.

Arnold's trust-busting complicates profiteering problem... United States facing big decline in exports... Little attention is being given to the problem of imports... American ships barred, under neutrality act, from trading with British ports.

WASHINGTON.—Thurman W. Arnold, and his trust-busting proclivities, are a problem not only for business men worried about what to do in the war emergency, but to certain other officials of the government. The whole question revolves around the fixing of prices.

The government as a whole, from President Roosevelt down, is determined that there shall not be profiteering, either at the expense of the belligerents or of the American consumers. There is no disagreement about that, and, to be fair about it, there is no important dissent by most of the manufacturers and retailers represented in Washington through their trade groups.

The business men say that they cannot control rise in cost of the raw materials, or of labor, but they have no desire to push prices higher than these two elements of expense require. They are remembering the deflation that followed the last war.

But when it comes to how to prevent unreasonable advances in cost, Old Man Worry walks in the door.

There are two obvious ways to accomplish it. One would be by government price fixing, as was done, in part, by the Lever act in the last war. Chief objection to this, strangely enough, comes not from the business men involved, though they don't like government price fixing, but from the government. Few on the government side who remember how the Lever act worked last time would be willing to risk it again.

Would Permit Business to Reach Price Agreements

The other solution would be to permit business itself to reach price agreements in its various lines. That appeals to the business men, naturally. It also appeals to some of the administration executives, especially in the department of commerce.

But not to Mr. Arnold. In fact, the department of justice is waving the big stick on anti-trust prosecutions as never before, threatening to prosecute all and sundry. Arnold gets a lot of publicity for his speeches and his gestures against "combinations in restraint of trade." There is perfectly good legal precedent in high court decisions that it is just as contrary to the letter and spirit of the anti-trust laws for competitors to agree to reduce prices as it is for them to agree to raise prices.

There is more logic in this, incidentally, than sounds possible if one is thinking only about the problem which now confronts the government—the prevention of profiteering. But when the law was framed its designers also had another practice in mind which was, at that time, very much in the public mind with regard to the alleged practices of the wicked monopolies.

The problem remains, however, how to regulate without anyone doing the regulating, and especially not the folks regulated!

United States Facing Big Decline in Exports

Our European competitors for South American trade have left American manufacturers a market crying for wares, but without much of the wherewithal to pay for them. And the European market for many of our products has dried up because of the war.

Take the automobile makers, for example. They find that their market in Scandinavia, which was pretty good, has disappeared, to all practical purposes, because of the shortage of gasoline. Rigorous restrictions on the use of gasoline have played havoc with practically every corner of Europe, with Australia, South Africa and many other parts of the world. It is not a question of world shortage of gasoline, or of war demands for this precious fluid. It is purely, so far, a question of ships to carry the gasoline to would-be purchasers.

The worst phase of this is that there is no silver lining to the cloud. There is no prospect of the world having enough shipping again until after the war is over, and perhaps for some little time after that. Ships are being destroyed at a prodigious rate.

Britain hopes to surmount this difficulty by convoys, but it is a real optimist who figures that there will be convoys to get gasoline to Sweden, Norway and Denmark. It would not suit the purposes of the British-French high command to have an ample supply of gasoline so close to Germany anyhow. Some of it might trickle through in response to German demands.

Besides, there is real fear, though the submarine extermination battle may go well, that bombing planes will also be a menace to shipping, neutral as well as vessels flying belligerent flags.

So the American auto makers are figuring on foregoing all foreign markets where the trouble with selling new cars is that there is nothing to put into their gas tanks.

South America Is Also A Discouraging Market

But that is only part of the bad export picture for the motor companies. There is no gasoline shortage in South America. At any rate it would be comparatively easy to supply any of the South American countries with oil. Tugs and barges could do the trick if necessary. But South America is almost as discouraging a market at the moment as Europe.

The trouble there is exchange. Most of the countries south of the Rio Grande were caught by the outbreak of the war with a lot of bad debts from Germany. The Nazis had been taking their exports, in considerable volume, paying for them with blocked marks—marks which could be spent only in Germany.

It is not just a question of losing the money, temporarily or permanently. One has to see why Latin America was willing to indulge in this form of barter to realize how serious it is now. The reason was that the countries to the south of us did not have the cash to pay for goods they were buying from Germany. They had to pay for them with exports. The United States was just as good a place for them to buy, if they had had the money. But they didn't, and their credit in this country was very poor because of those defaulted bonds and their own restrictions on exchange.

Now they are worse off than they were before, having parted with huge amounts of exports for which they have received no payment, their normal export markets cut off so far as central Europe is concerned, Britain buying only necessities. Then there is great difficulty in increasing exports to the United States to pay for what they want. An increase of United States imports of Latin-American products would solve the problem.

Little Attention Is Given To Problem of Imports

So much attention is being given to the alleged war possibilities of the neutrality battle in the senate, and so much oratory is centered on the export of arms, that very little attention is being given to imports. Yet imports are of the essence so far as American trade and American business are concerned.

Before the first World war the United States exported more than she imported. That was sound, then, because the United States actually owed money, and the excess of exports over imports paid the interest on that debt. (This was mostly in the form of foreign holdings of United States stocks and bonds, but it works out the same way.)

Today the world owes the United States, even if one eliminates the debts that we suspect will never be paid. So the United States, to maintain a sound equilibrium, should import a little more than it exports, so that the foreigners can pay us the interest, at least, on the debt they owe us.

That is part of the picture. The idea of building up a United States merchant marine is another part. Many people under the pressure of more exciting events regard these two as academic. But there is a third phase. How are we going to get imports that we actually need brought to us.

By its mandatory provisions preventing American ships from carrying cargo to belligerents, the pending bill virtually hands over to foreign shipping all transport to French and British territory. This means not only exports but imports as well.

Bars American Ships From Trading With British Ports

Curiously enough, the original agreement provided that British ships should haul half the cotton and half the rubber. This was changed, later, at the request of the British, so that now the agreement provides that all the cotton is to be hauled in British ships, and all the rubber in United States bottoms.

But the neutrality act would bar United States ships from trading with the British ports in the East from which the rubber is exported!

Moreover, the bill has plenty of teeth, if no change is made to recognize these practical conditions. For instance, an American ship stopping at Singapore for rubber, or Sidney for wool, would make her owners liable to a fine of $50,000, not to mention imprisonment for up to five years!

The tragic part of it all is that in recent years, after decades of stupid bungling and terrific waste of money and effort, the United States had really been building up a good merchant marine. Moreover, many additional ships are under construction or contract. Regardless of how trade with Latin America is developed—remembering that of course all British and French possessions in that part of the world would be barred to our ships by this bill if enacted in its present form—it will not be sufficient to maintain the present, and building, United States merchant marine if our ships are to be barred from the rest of the world.

Buckram and Tacks To Stiffen Valance

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: A friend gave me a copy of your Book 3 and I can't tell you what a transformation is taking place in my home because of it. For a long time I have wanted living room curtains with smoothly fitted valances stiffened with buckram. Could you give me step-by-step directions for making them?"

A four-inch valance shelf; buckram and thumbtacks are the only "extras" needed. 1: Cut the buckram.

ram the exact size of the finished valance—no seam allowances. The chintz for the valance and the facing material are cut larger as indicated. 2: Outline the scallops by drawing around the buckram. 3: Stitch the chintz and facing with right sides together. Steps 4, 5, and 6: Trim the scallops; clip between them; then turn and press. 7: Insert the buckram; fitting it smoothly into the scallops. Turn in and stitch the top; allowing 1/2 inch to extend above the buckram. 8: Tack this soft edge to the shelf.

NOTE: If you have had Mrs. Spears' books 1 and 2, you will want No. 3. It is full of new ideas for homemakers, and step by step directions for making important pieces of furniture. Also newest styles and methods of making slip covers and curtains. Original designs for rag rugs; gifts and bazaar items. Send 10 cents in coin with name and address to Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Prologue to Love

THE STORY THUS FAR

Lovely, independent Autumn Dean, returning home to British Columbia from abroad without her father's knowledge, stops at the home of Hector Cardigan, an old family friend. He tells her that she should not have come home, that things have changed. Arriving home at the "Castle of the Norns," she is greeted lovingly by her father, Jarvis Dean, who gives her to understand that she is welcome—for a short visit. Her mother, former belle named Millicent Odell, has been dead for years. Autumn cannot understand her father's attitude, though gives him to understand that she is home for good. She has grown tired of life in England, where she lived with an aunt. Her father gives a welcoming dance at the castle. Autumn meets Florian Parr, dashing, well-educated young man of the countryside. Late in the evening Autumn leaves the dance, rides horseback to the neighboring ranch where she meets Bruce Landor, friend and champion of her childhood days.

CHAPTER II—Continued

It was only when they reached the long avenue of Lombardy poplars leading to the Landor house that their voices ceased. Bruce seemed suddenly to have become preoccupied with something apart and remote as he rode slowly forward, his eyes fixed upon the house that stood among the shadows at the farther end of the avenue. A cool ripple of apprehensiveness passed down over Autumn's body, a feeling ominous and totally strange to her experience. She recalled now that as a girl she had always been afraid of Jane Landor, though she had never known the reason. And now, within a room there beyond that glowing window, lay the helpless form of the woman whose forbidding manner had often caused Autumn to shrink from her. It was not fear that overcame her now, but pity—deep pity for the woman whose staunch fortitude had been reduced to frailty by a life that had beaten her at last.

When Bruce finally dismounted before the doorway and stretched his hand up to her, she laid her own slender one within it and got down. For a moment she clung to his hand and hesitated.

"Wait, Bruce," she whispered, and the thought struck her that she should not have come like this to see Jane Landor.

He smiled down upon her and folded his other hand over hers. "You look—frightened," he said, leaning close to her.

She followed him into the house. The large room was in darkness, but a light from the open doorway of an adjoining room cast a soft glimmer over the old-fashioned furnishings of the place.

Immediately a woman's voice, small and nervous to the point of querulousness, spoke from the inner room.

"Is that you, Bruce?"

"Yes, mother. I've brought a visitor to see you."

There was a moment's silence. Then, "A visitor? Who?"

"I'll let you figure that out for yourself," Bruce said, and led Autumn into the room.

Jane Landor was in a half-sitting position among the pillows, a light attached to the bed above her thin, colorless face. Autumn had expected to find her changed from the woman she remembered, but she was not prepared for what she saw there under the soft light of the bed-lamp. She drew back instinctively before the look from the fierce black eyes that were turned upon her as she stepped through the doorway.

"Come in where I can see you," Jane Landor ordered, and struggled to draw herself up for a closer look at her visitor.

Autumn stepped into the light and stood for a moment smiling down at the frail woman.

"Don't you remember me?" she asked in a soft voice that was none too steady.

Jane Landor's face twisted suddenly as if in spasm. She lifted her thin hands to her wasted cheeks and drew her breath in a quick gasp. "You! You!" she cried. "Millicent Odell! What brings you back here? Take her away, Bruce! Take her away!"

Her voice was a hysterical shriek now. She covered her eyes with her hands as she lay back sobbing among the pillows.

Bruce was beside her instantly, his arms about her shoulders. "Mother—mother, it's Autumn Dean," he tried to reassure her. "Don't you remember Autumn? She has come back."

His face under the light was shocked and bewildered. "Take her away, I say!" Jane Landor insisted vehemently. "Nothing but death follows in the way of the Odells!"

She clung to Bruce, who tried in vain to soothe her, and Autumn stole in a trembling daze from the room and out of the house.

CHAPTER III

Breakfast in the Dean household had always been a ritual. In his busiest season Jarvis Dean nevertheless attended his table of a morning with the leisurely grace of a country gentleman. If a man could not begin the day becomingly, the Laird maintained, he had better remain in bed.

He was in good spirits this morning as he sat in his place, his daughter on his right and old Hannah opposite him at the end of the table nearest the kitchen. Hannah Stewart had, since the death of her mistress twenty years before, been accustomed to eating with the family unless there were guests. This arrangement had seemed to Jarvis to be the most sensible one while Autumn was small and had to be attended to, and later Hannah was so much one of the family that it was unthinkable that she should eat alone. Hannah had seen to it that the paper streamers and other decorations that had festooned the dining room for the dance of the night before had been cleared away and the place restored to its wonted homely austerity. She would give her attention to the drawing room and the rest of the house as soon as the meal was over. Here in this room, however, life had returned to its accustomed way.

To Autumn, it seemed that some perverse fate had ordered the quiet scene so that she might find it impossible to seek an answer to the questions that had assailed her mind throughout an almost sleepless night. She had ridden home from the Landor place and had returned to her father's guests with a feeling that some curse had been laid upon her. She had moved about under a black spell that was as unreal to her as a delirious dream. And when it was all over and the last guest had gone, she had hurried to her room and lain awake until dawn.

Her father turned his eyes searchingly upon her as she seated herself at the breakfast table.

"It was a little too much for you, that business last night," he observed.

"You look—frightened," he said, leaning close to her.

served gently. "You look stale this morning."

"I didn't sleep well," Autumn admitted. "I'll be all right when I've had a little rest."

She had permitted her father to know only that she had indulged an impulse last night to get away alone for a ride in the moonlight; it had been impossible to tell him of her frightening visit to the Landors.

"I don't know what's wrong with the women nowadays," Jarvis continued. "In my time a young woman could dance all night and go to work the next day and be none the worse for it. But the women today have gone to pot."

Old Hannah sniffed. "I don't see that your men nowadays show much to brag about."

The Laird smiled. "Aye, they're a feckless lot, and have a mighty high opinion of themselves."

"It's hard to judge the present by the past, Da," Autumn ventured.

"Aye, my girl, there's something in that, too. It's the times that make the difference. It was a hard life we lived when I was a youngster—and it made hard men of us."

And hard women, too, Autumn thought, her mind upon Jane Landor.

"It'd take more than a hard life to make anything o' the like o' that Par lad, I'm thinking," Hannah suggested.

"There's no way of telling that," Jarvis countered. "There's good blood in the boy. His father comes of a good line."

"The world's full of fools who can boast of good fathers before them, then," said Hannah stoutly.

"Right enough," declared Jarvis, chuckling to himself. "It takes two to breed even a flock of culls."

"Will you be using the car today, Da?" Autumn asked abruptly.

"No. I'll be down at the pens till supper. Haven't you done enough traveling to be content for a while?"

"I have some things to do in town, she said. 'I'll leave right away and be back early.'"

"There'll be no call for haste," the Laird cautioned her. "You drive that car like something that had lost her wits."

Autumn smiled at him. "I'd lose them completely, Da, if I had to sit and watch you drive it."

Her father grunted. "There's no taming you, I'm afraid. Well, you didn't get that from me."

"No," observed old Hannah, "that she didn't. She's her own mother over again, and there's little fault to find with her for that."

Silence fell upon Jarvis Dean as Hannah told of how Millicent Dean had ridden to the hounds in the days when the Cornwalls of Ashcroft Manor were still famous disciples of the chase. Autumn listened eagerly and would have ventured a question here and there but that her father's brows grew darker and his countenance clouded the more as the garulous old housekeeper proceeded.

"That will be enough now," Jarvis interrupted finally, in a voice that quieted Hannah at once and the breakfast was finished almost in silence.

"You'd better be getting away," the Laird advised Autumn as they got up from the table, and Autumn felt that her father had no desire to leave her alone with Hannah. "Get your things together and I'll have the car brought out for you."

And while Autumn was in her room preparing for the trip to town, she could hear her father's voice in stern admonishment to poor old Hannah.

Hector Cardigan possessed a horror of glaring daylight, and the rays of the late morning sun that filtered into his drawing room between the heavy drapes of the windows suggested to Autumn the curious fingers of the present prying into the crypt of the past. She sat in one of Hector's armchairs, a glass of iced tea in her hand, her lids half closed upon that searching beam of light from the window.

"Hector," she said, glancing up at him with sudden directness, "I came to have a talk with you. Do you mind?"

Hector smiled at her. "We used to get on very well with our talks, if I remember."

"I was a child, then, Hector."

"Yes—that's so, that's so. I really hadn't considered that aspect of our—our friendship, may I say?"

"I am no longer a child, Hector."

"Very true, my dear. I recognize the fact—and I am forced to confess that I have never been a spectacular success in conversations with women."

"You don't have to be on this occasion, Hector. I am not here for small talk."

"Hm-m—well, of course—"

"I want to ask you some questions."

"I cannot promise—ah, definitely, you know—to answer any question a young woman might put to me. Can I, now?"

Autumn could not tell whether his manner was becoming evasive or merely apologetic.

"You can answer the questions I have in mind, Hector. I am sure of that."

"Well, we shall see, perhaps. What, for example, are you going to ask?"

Autumn drained her glass and set it aside.

"I went over to visit Jane Landor last night," she began.

"I thought you were giving a dance."

"I left it for an hour or so—and rode over to the Landor place. I met Bruce and he took me to the house to see his mother."

"I see. Rather singular conduct—for a hostess, I should say."

"I'll admit it was—for the time being, in any case. I saw Jane Landor."

"You—spoke to her?"

"I'm not sure. Perhaps a word. I forget. It was what she said to me that I have come to ask you about."

Hector moved uneasily. "Poor Jane Landor is not to be held to account for anything she says these days, my dear. I understand she is no longer—coherent."

"I am not going to hold her responsible for what she said, Hector. I want to know the meaning of it, that's all."

"Hm-m, well, my dear—what did she say?"

"When I stepped into the room with Bruce, she became hysterical. She declared to Bruce that I was Millicent Odell and pleaded with him to put me out."

"Was that all?"

"Not quite. As I turned to leave, I heard her say that death followed in the way of the Odells."

"Anything else?"

"Nothing. I hurried out and rode back home as fast as I could."

For several seconds Hector remained standing with his back to the fireplace, his hands folded behind him, his eyes at gaze across the room.

"Well, now," he said at last, "it was a somewhat curious greeting you received, I confess, and one likely to give you pause, but as I said before, the poor woman—"

"The poor woman, Hector, has lost her sense of time and place, but there is no use in your attempting to convince me that there was nothing significant in what she said."

"Hm-m—well, perhaps you had better ask me your questions, my dear, and I shall consider them."

"What sort of woman was my mother, Hector?" Autumn asked him bluntly.

He looked at her quickly, a startled expression in his eyes. "Your mother? She was the most beautiful woman I have ever known, my dear."

"I have heard that—years ago—from Hannah. Was she in love with my father?"

Hector smiled. "How can one know what is hidden in a woman's heart?"

"I know my father loved her—and loves her still, after twenty years. Did anyone else love her?"

"My dear child, we all loved her," Hector replied with a sigh. He turned slightly away from her then and picked up one of the yellowed dice on the mantelpiece. "She was the only woman I ever loved."

The simplicity of the statement brought a momentary silence to Autumn. She was aware suddenly of an awed thrill, as though some haunting fragrance of the past had for a fleet instant possessed the room. But then, as she glanced covertly up at Hector, it seemed to her that she had always known that the elderly soldier had cherished a romantic and hopeless passion for Millicent. Autumn made an effort to regain her composure.

"Did Geoffrey Landor love her?" she pursued.

"I don't see how he could help it, really."

"Please, Hector. I want the truth. You know exactly what I mean. I must know."

Hector Cardigan stepped slowly from his place and seated himself in a large chair opposite Autumn.

"Partly—as far as it goes," Autumn replied.

He spread his feet before him, and slowly brought his hands together, the points of his fingers meeting.

"In my time, my dear," he began, "we were accustomed to living our lives in the best way we knew how, without giving much thought to the past. This country was settled by men who had left their pasts behind them in the Old Country, and were eager to begin life anew in this. It is only natural if I should feel a bit embarrassed, perhaps, in the presence of a young woman who demands that I tell her what manner of mother she had. I have not grown used to the ways of young people today. It happens, however, that I can be just as direct in my answer as you were in your question. You say I know exactly what you mean. I do. And I tell you that Millicent Odell, who became Millicent Dean, was a woman of honor and integrity and would have gone to her grave before she would have broken the vows that bound her in marriage to Jarvis Dean." He paused for a moment and gazed unflinchingly into Autumn's eyes. "Is that an answer to your question, my dear?" he asked finally.

"Partly—as far as it goes," Autumn replied.

"I think it goes quite far enough," Hector said. "I confess I—"

"Let me come to the point at once, Hector," Autumn interrupted. "Behind what Jane Landor said to me last night there exists a life-long hatred—or fear—of mother. A woman doesn't ordinarily hate another woman without reason, and somewhere at the bottom of it all, if you take the trouble to search, you find a man. It isn't reasonable to suppose that father is the man in question. We know him too well for that. What I want to know is whether Geoffrey Landor is the man."

"I think I have answered that, my dear."

"Please, Hector!" Autumn was losing her patience. "Do you think that Geoffrey shot himself because he loved mother too much to live without her?"

"It is too late—too late by many years, my dear, to answer that question. I could believe it. I knew Geoffrey well. He was headstrong. He was—romantic, I should say. But he was hopelessly in debt at the time—and he had been drinking heavily, as I recall, for several days before the tragedy. Given the facts, I should imagine your guess would be as good as mine."

"And your guess, Hector?"

He considered the question a long time before he made his reply. Then he got suddenly to his feet and stepped toward Autumn, his shoulders drawn back and his head erect in soldierly bearing. "I refuse to answer that question, my girl. You should know better than to ask it. There is a point in such matters beyond which a man of honor can not go. I must ask you to consider the question closed."

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND SOCIAL PROGRESS

LESSON TEXT—Micah 2:9-11; Luke 21:29-31, 34-36; I Corinthians 6:9-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?—I Corinthians 6:9.

"International Temperance Sunday—October 29, 1939." Let us join with people the world over in making our protest against the sale and use of intoxicating liquors. If every Christian would declare himself on this matter now, there would be a tremendous impact made on this universal problem and notice would be served on the liquor industry, on politicians, and on unbelieving mankind that Christianity intends to do something about it. We are far too docile and quiet on such matters, when we ought to speak up for God and for our country.

The lesson portions may seem a little unrelated, but study of them yields three important truths regarding the use of wine and strong drink.

I. Lovers of Wine and Strong Drink Destroy Their Nation (Mic. 2:9-11).

That statement may surprise some of our self-styled patriots who like to wave the flag and speak swelling words of devotion to our country and who at the same time love their intoxicating drinks. Micah rightly points out that his people had come to the place where they chose men to be prophets because they encouraged the people in the use of wine and strong drinks (v. 11). They must therefore expect the result which follows, namely, the destruction of the home and of the nation (vv. 9, 10).

We are all familiar with the claim that prohibition retarded the advancement of our nation and that its repeal would bring a return to higher moral standards, reduce crime, bring in prosperity, etc. The facts reveal that none of these have come true. Crime has increased by leaps and bounds under repeal, a situation so well known as to call for no proof. Moral standards have gone rapidly downward with the free use of liquor. If you don't believe that, ask a policeman what goes on in our taverns, or just keep your eyes half open and you can see for yourself.

Just now much is being made of the many jobs which are supposed to have been created by the liquor industry. What are the facts? The Christian Herald tells us, "A million dollars spent for furniture would employ 339 persons, spent for boots and shoes 336 persons, for home furnishings 191 persons, for booze just 95 persons." And remember that jobs making the stuff that destroys other jobs, are not worth having. The man who drinks is helping to destroy his nation.

II. Christians Do Not Drink, Because They Look for Christ's Return (Luke 21:29-31, 34-36).

If we are not "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13), we should consider whether any of the things mentioned in these verses have gained control in our lives: the cares of this life, surfeiting, or drunkenness. But why speak to Christians about that? Surely they do not use intoxicants. Sadly enough, some do. Taking advantage of the fact that the Bible speaks of temperance rather than of abstinence, they seek to justify an indulgence in these things which they (and their neighbors) know is dishonoring to God and destructive of their testimony and usefulness in the community.

Christian, Jesus is coming again! He may come today! In fact, the fig tree (vv. 29, 30), which is the nation Israel, has long been shooting forth new branches and bearing green leaves. The indications are that Christ is coming soon. Are you ready to meet Him?

III. Drunkards and Other Sinners Need to Be Saved (I Cor. 6:9-11)

Being drunk is not a joke, even though thoughtless people laugh and cartoonists and writers of jokes use such unfortunates as their stock in trade. Drunkenness is a foul and sinful thing, classed by the apostle Paul with the lowest of human vices. Review the list as it is given in verses 9 and 10 (and by the way, notice that covetousness is mentioned there too) and place drunkenness in its proper classification. Call it what it really is—sin, and then call on the One who can save from sin and then you will be washed from your sin, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus (v. 11). In Christ there is hope for the drunkard. A spiritual revival is the real answer to the liquor problem. Let us seek to promote it even as we at the same time give ourselves to an intelligent and constructive battle against this destructive force in the life of our nation.

Ask Me Another A General Quiz

The Questions

1. Does a ship made of steel weigh more or less than one of wood of the same size?
2. From what did Lake Erie get its name?
3. How recently were bows and arrows used in warfare?
4. If a bullet is shot through a board, which gets through first, the bullet or the hole?
5. What is the greatest degree of longitude a place may have?

The Answers

1. One of steel weighs ½ less.
2. From the Erie or Cat tribe of Indians, which once dwelt along the south shore.
3. Bows and arrows were used as recently as in the Napoleonic wars. When Napoleon invaded Russia the latter's armies included Tartars who used bows and arrows and were dead shots up to 100 yards.
4. The hole.
5. The greatest degree is 180.

Tinley Park Garden Club

"God be with you in the Autumn
When the birds and flowers have fled
And along the woodland pathway
Leaves are falling, gold and red;
When the summer lies behind you,
In the evening of the year
God be with you in the Autumn
Then to fill your heart with cheer."

The last regular meeting of the Tinley Park Garden Club took place Thursday afternoon, October 19th, at the home of Mrs. W. Funk. The study group discussed many phases of Autumn life in the garden, also "Bulbs to Flower for Christmas." The general rule is that all bulbs should be left in a cold dark storage for a rooting period of at least eight weeks before they are brought to light. Hyacinths and tulips should have two inches high. Bring bulbs to light gradually—never plunge from darkness to light.

At the close of the study period, the new president, Mrs. Harry Mager, opened the business meeting with an interesting little speech of co-operation, and closed her remarks by reading a beautiful poem.

During the afternoon, Mrs. W. B. Combs was elected as new Civic Chairman, to carry on the very fine work of the past chairman, Mrs. Luella Rogers. Since the organization of the Garden Club, Mrs. Rogers has untiringly given her best satisfaction of the club body, and in appreciation of this she was presented with a lovely book. Presentation was made by Mrs. H. Anderson. Mrs. R. J. Hug and Mrs. Rogers will be sent by the club, to the "School for Judges." After finishing this course of study, which will be held at the Palmer House, Chicago, both of these ladies will be accredited judges, and recorded as such with the State Garden Club. After all business had been attended to, a very interesting program was presented by Mrs. Hug, the climax of which was "Fortunes for All," with many a hearty laugh. Mrs. W. Funk then invited the members into her attractive basement where her guests were treated to a lovely Halloween spread of delicious hot sandwiches, potato chips, coffee and doughnuts. The tables were beautifully decorated for the occasion and each lady felt like a little girl again as she left for home carrying a small black and yellow favor, filled with goodies. The next meeting of the Garden Club will be held at the home of Mrs. John Werth.

Honored Bride at Shower

A miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Esther Marquardt in honor of the bride of Wilbert Wille on Saturday, October 14th was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kampe, last Tuesday. A color scheme of blue and green the bride's chosen color predominated. The evening was spent in playing cards and Bunco after which a lunch was served to the fifty-five guests present. She received many beautiful gifts.

MOKENA

SCOUT NEWS

Each meeting night the boys are getting closer to take the Scout test and that means we will have a chartered troop in Mokena within a few weeks. The troop will be known as troop No. 40 of the Indian Trail District of the Potawatomi Council. The name Potawatomi is a Indian derived from the Indian battle grounds in this vicinity. Last Monday evening eight boys attended the scout meeting and gave a good account of what they have already accomplished in scouting. In fact most of the boys are ready to pass the tenderfoot test. Following are the boys who attended the meeting last Monday night, Gordon Speies, Geo. Rinke, Jr., H. Meyers, Norman Williams, "Bob" Homerding, Gordon Clevenger, "Shotsie" Muehler and Charles Mau. Friday night True Daniels, our Neighborhood Scout Commissioner will again be with us to help us prepare for the tenderfoot test and will give us a good story or two and maybe a game to play.

By the way, for the boys who become charter members in this troop, there will be a big surprise given by the Mokena Civic Club, sponsors of the Scout Troop and it will be something the boys will always remember. Remember fellows, its a big secret until the time comes.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of my dear wife and our mother, daughter and sister Myrtle Sippel who passed away one year ago October 28, 1938. How often do we tread the path.

That leads us to the grave Where rests the one we loved so well

But whom we could not save. Long days, long nights, you bore your pain,

Waiting for cure, but all in vain. God saw that you were suffering And the hills were hard to climb. So He closed your weary eyes and whispered.

Peace be thine. C. J. SIPPEL AND FAMILY. MR. AND MRS. FRANK HIRSCH, SR., MRS. HARRY MALL and FRANK HIRSCH, JR.

A Remarkable Home

—O—

In Council Bluffs, Iowa, is located one of the most remarkable institutions in our nation. This institution is the Christian Home Orphanage, founded fifty-seven years ago this next December.

This Home for nearly fifty-seven years, has given continuous service in behalf of homeless and destitute children. During these long years, the doors of the Home have never been closed, day or night. This Home has been a refuge for thousands of little children from all parts of the country. These children have been tenderly cared for, trained and educated and placed in fine private families, and in every way they have been given the opportunity to grow up into outstanding Christian men and women.

The Christian Home Orphanage, during all these years, has been carried on and built up to its present great size, by the free-will offerings of good people from all sections of the country.

The Christian Home offers to everyone, everywhere, the opportunity to co-operate in the greatest of all works in the training and education of homeless and orphan children. If all would co-operate by giving as they could afford, the financial burdens of the Home would be well met. We ask that every reader of this article mail to the Christian Home Orphanage at Council Bluffs, Iowa, a donation for the Thanksgiving offering, in keeping with the blessings God has given you. We know that you will be blessed by so doing, and that you will have a more enjoyable Thanksgiving day yourself in the realization that you are one of a great company of friends throughout the United States who are giving of their means to enable the Christian Home to give love and Christian training to homeless boys and girls.

Please send all contributions to the Christian Home Orphanage, Council Bluffs, Iowa. The same will be duly acknowledged and credited in the official publication of the Institution, a copy of which will be mailed to you.

Will Co. Home Bureau Holds Annual Meeting

The Will County Home Bureau completed its first year of University of Illinois work in Home Economics last week, and held the first Annual Meeting at the Elwood Community Hall on October 20th. There were 160 attending the meeting which was in charge of Mrs. Wayne McClure of Manhattan, County Chairman, and the other members of the executive board.

Miss Mary Louise Chase, of the state extension service at Urbana, gave an educational travelogue of her trip and studies in Europe last year in a very delightful manner and was the principal speaker of the day. Another special attraction was a 4-H division on the program. A demonstration of fitting garments was given by Shirley Begler and Romaine Mutchler of Wilmington and a talk by Dortha Eisenbrandt of Frankfort.

The reports given by the members of the executive board and the unit chairman in the county showed that the first year of work had been a decided success. Special music by Ruth Dyer of Manhattan, Mary Anne Allen of Joliet, and a group from the Elwood band was also enjoyed.

Due to the fact that Mrs. McClure would not be able to act as chairman for the coming year, the following officers were elected:

Chairman, Mrs. Howard Scheer, Frankfort; Vice - Chairman, Miss Emily Borms, Peotone; Secretary, Mrs. Phil Goodwin, Wilmington; Treasurer, Miss Caroline Bentley, New Lenox.

Other members of the executive board are Mrs. Paul Gerhardt Beecher; Mrs. Wm. Wurtz, Wilmington; Mrs. Lawrence Kohl, Mokena; Mrs. Wm. Lister, Lockport; Mrs. Howard Phelps, Plainfield.

There were four retiring members: Mrs. R. Webb, Plainfield; Mrs. Harry Humphrey, Joliet; Mrs. H. Nicholson, Elwood; and Mrs. Wayne McClure, Manhattan. At the close of the morning session Mrs. G. Armstrong of Symerton presented these board members and Miss Chase and Mrs. Edith Huffman, Home Adviser with corsages.

The new Home Bureau year is now under way and anyone interested in joining is invited to do so.

Special Health Speaker to Be in County

One of the special speakers which the Will County Home Bureau is to sponsor during the winter is Miss Fannie Brooks of the University of Illinois, who is Assistant Professor of Health Education. Miss Brooks will speak on the "Common Cold and its Prevention" at a meeting to be held in the general assembly room at the Joliet Public Library on the afternoon of November 1st. The meeting is to start at 2 o'clock and will be preceded by special music. This is to be an open meeting and all Home Bureau members, their friends, and anyone else interested in home health is invited to attend.

Miss Brooks will present to her audience a thorough discussion of how to prepare for family health this winter, in order to prevent the common illnesses which often cause much trouble in the home.

Plan now to hear Miss Brooks on November 1st.

TO HOLD CLINICS

A clinic for chest examination will be held Monday, October 23rd, from 8:30 to 10:30 A. M., at Will County Sanatorium.

A clinic for crippled children and adults will be held Wednesday morning, October 25th, from 8:30 to 10:30, in the Public Health Council rooms.

American Petroleum Interests Gain New Oil Rights in Arabia

CHART ABOVE shows how the United States leads the world in the production of oil. Records show this country to be far ahead of any other nation or any combination of nations. The next largest producer, Soviet Russia, pumps one-fifth less than the 1,200,883,000 barrels of crude oil obtained here.

Saudi, Desert Nation, Grants Concessions to U. S. Company.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

More of Arabia now has been thrown open to American oil prospectors by the petroleum concession awarded to the Standard Oil Company of California and its associates for the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

The relatively young desert nation of Saudi Arabia is one-fourth as large as the United States, or larger than Mexico; and prospecting in one province alone has already placed the country among the leading oil-producers of the Near East.

In the native land of Mohammed and the traditional realm of the Queen of Sheba, a 40-mile pipe line now carries seaward the oil from a new kind of well that shares the esteem always accorded wells in that parched country. Terminus of the pipe line is Ras Tanura, opened this year as the first deep-water port on Arabia's Persian Gulf coast, once notorious for piracy.

Land of Thirst.

The Saudi Arabia concession gives United States oil interests two stakes in the petroleum-rich region where Asia, Europe and Africa meet. The Standard Oil Company of California and the Texas corporation have added the Saudi Arabia territory to their holdings in the Bahrain islands, 20 miles off the Arabian coast, which had been a historic center for pearl-fishing before the discovery of oil seven years ago. Rights to the rich oil fields of the Near East are held by the British in Iran, the French in Syria, the British in Kuwait. In Iraq the rights are held jointly by KING IBN SAUD is the fierce and fearless ruler of Saudi Arabia, desert country, which has just made new oil concessions to American companies. Rumor has it that the king's desire to deal with American "Big Business" caused him to turn down an offer for twice as much money from Japanese oil interests.

the British and Dutch, with minority votes from French and American companies.

Oil is opening a new era for Saudi Arabia, where lack of water has kept untraveled an unknown region surpassed in mystery only by the unexplored areas of Antarctica. Although one man in every seven—the Moslem fraction of the world's population—aspires to visit the country, few dare to do more than skirt a desert expanse that is second in size to the Sahara.

Country Is Dry and Hot.

The rough rectangle of Arabia has a lofty central plateau, or Nejd—high, dry, and hot. Bands of desert border the plateau, rocky in the north, sandy in the south. Saudi Arabia crosses the peninsula from the Red sea to the Persian gulf, excluding a fringe of smaller semi-independent states on the north and south. A land of no perennial rivers and little rain, Saudi Arabia must find its moisture through wells and springs.

Perhaps less than one-fifth of the country is cultivated by patient fellahin who shelter their citrus trees and pomegranates behind wind-breaks of tamarisk trees, or carry water to patches of egg-plants, onions, melons, and carrots. The Bedouins drive their flocks of sheep, herds of camels and horses through the land in the wake of rain, traveling by night to escape the sun's heat and navigating the barren steppe or desert as the sailor navigates a trackless sea.

An independent kingdom of 25 years' growth, Saudi Arabia has extended the authority of a powerful inland dynasty from coast to coast over 80 per cent of the arid peninsula which natives call "The Island of the Arabs." Since 1913 when Ibn Saud ejected the Turks, he has pushed his realm outward in every direction, capturing Mecca in 1924. He now rules some 800,000 square miles, nearly 10 times the size of Great Britain. Today a dozen nations, including the United States, have accredited diplomatic representatives to the desert state.

European War Has Echo Near U. S. Frontiers

Colonies Furnish Supplies Needed on Battlefronts.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

Martial law in Bermuda, a mobilization act passed in British Guiana, war emergency regulations in Jamaica, Canadian shipping taken over by the navy, and a training course for Canadian fishermen's submarine patrol—these are among the reminders that Europe's war condition is not confined to Europe.

European colonies and dominions bring Europe's war to the very border of the United States on the Canadian frontier. Other war measures are no farther away than the Bahamas, 75 miles off the coast of Florida, or Bermuda, five hours from New York by air, or Jamaica, 600 miles northeast of the Panama canal. France, as represented by Clipperton island, lies due south of New Mexico (about 1,500 miles away). The Netherlands, mobilized although neutral, has an island group some 700 miles east of the Panama canal, and less than twice as far from Miami. Together, Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands have almost 14,000,000 subjects in the New world where their colonies and dominions aggregate more than 4,000,000 square miles.

Great Britain Leads.

Great Britain, thanks mainly to Canada—her largest dominion—controls 94 per cent of this land and 98 per cent of the people. Her New world holdings constitute 30 per cent of the entire British empire.

In the South Atlantic in 1914 British and German fleets fought the Battle of Falkland islands off the coast of Argentina, for control of the group of 100 bleak little sheep-pasture islands which Great Britain had occupied as recently as 1833. Bermuda in the North Atlantic is headquarters for the American and West Indies squadron of the British navy.

Most of the European footholds in the Western hemisphere are remnants of much larger empires held early in the colonizing era. French Guiana and its associated inland territory of Inini in the northern portion of South America are the oldest members of the French colonial family, having been occupied in 1626. Barbados in the Caribbean sea has been British since 1627. Netherlands took their section of Guiana in 1667.

A Suit of Clothes

By MARY KEELING

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

"THERE are certain temperaments," the professor was remarking blandly, "of which it is—" "Look out, daddy!" cried Pat. The professor nimbly sidestepped to avoid the string of motors that suddenly started when the green light changed.

"There are temperaments, my dear, of which it is—" "Oh, daddy, do please look out!" Pat cried again as a car whirled around the corner.

The professor sidestepped once more, but not nimbly enough this time to avoid a splashing of muddy water as the car passed through a puddle close to the curb.

"Oh, daddy," wailed Pat, as she mopped away at the professor's coat tails, "whatever will mother say? And your second best trousers are quite too—too unsafe for wear in public."

"There are temperaments, Patricia," began the professor.

"I do wish, dearest," said Pat reproachfully, "that you'd try to remember your own temperament—how careless you are about crossing streets and spoiling clothes and—"

"Henry," remarked the professor's wife at the breakfast table the next morning, "you simply must order a new suit of clothes at once. Your appearance is a disgrace to the family."

"That reminds me, my dear," said the professor cheerfully. "I have a distinct impression that I ordered a suit of clothes last week." "Why, daddy!" exclaimed Pat in astonishment, "however did you come to order a suit all by yourself?"

"It is true," allowed the professor, "that I gave the order to a young man who called upon me after class time. I feel reasonably certain, however, that it was clothing he wished to sell."

"Henry Porter!" cried his wife despairingly, "do you mean to say that you gave an unknown salesman an order for clothes without seeing what they were like?"

"My dear, you quite distress me," expostulated the professor. "The young man seemed of a most superior type and now that I consider the occurrence I remember mention of a club. It appears that his firm is most particular whom they admit to its membership. I was selected in order that a name somewhat familiar in educational circles might head their list."

"How much did you pay down?" asked Mrs. Porter.

"Only $2, if I remember correctly." "And when is the rest to be paid?" asked the business manager of the firm relentlessly.

The professor squirmed a little in his chair just as the doorbell rang, thus relieving him of the necessity of making an immediate reply. Fate was pursuing him, however, for Pat returned to the dining room with an aggressive sort of young man who demanded of the professor his $2 installment due the suit club.

"May I ask," said Mrs. Porter with great dignity, "when my husband's suit will be delivered?"

"Oh, most any time, ma'am," said the collector with a sly wink at Pat. "Some one is chosen each week to get a free suit and the old gentleman may be the next lucky one."

"Daddy," whispered Pat as she opened the door for the professor, "there's a perfectly beautiful young man waiting for you in the library." The professor adjusted his near-sight glasses as the young man rose from a chair.

"You'll not remember me, Professor Porter, but I'm the man who induced you to sign up with that suit club. I've found out that they are a bad lot, but I want you to believe that I honestly thought it on the square. If you'll tell me how much you've given them I'll be glad to pay you back myself. You were so white to me that I can't bear to see you fleeced."

"I see no reason in the world," replied the professor, mildly, "why I should allow you to be the loser. The amount is inconsequential, for I ascertained some weeks ago that the plan was fraudulent. However, I am exceedingly glad to have you restore my belief in my sound judgment of character. I confess it has been somewhat shaken of late. This, my dear," he added, as Pat entered the room patiently for the purpose of meeting the caller, "is Mr. Samuel Salter. You may perhaps recall my mentioning him in connection with the purchase of a suit of clothes. My daughter, Patricia, Mr. Salter."

"Daddy, darling," said Pat, squeezing the professor's arm rapturously after the young man had reluctantly taken his leave for the time being, "it's no wonder, poor dear, that you fell for that suit club."

"It is indeed gratifying," remarked the professor, "to know that Mr.—ah—Salter's countenance of nobility and refinement mirrors the sterling character that I at once credited him with."

"What a funny old pet you are, daddy," crooned Pat, kissing the soon-to-be bald spot on top of the professor's head.

PUMPKIN PIES FOR HALLOWEEN

See Recipes Below.

When Witches and Goblins Roam

What night is better suited to informal entertaining than all Halloween's Eve? Candlelight, leering Jack-o-lanterns, and crepe paper decorations in orange and black create an eerie atmosphere for an evening of hilarious fun.

No one "dresses"—or, if they do, they dress in grotesque costumes which only add to the festivity.

Entertainment is simple, and easy to provide. Old fortunetelling games and bobbing for apples are always fun, and a trip through a "chamber of horrors" is as much a part of Halloween as are good things to eat.

For variety, and a lull in the excitement of wilder entertainment, you might try a "paper and pencil game"—a prize to be given to the guest who can list the greatest number of superstitions, or answer the greatest number of questions in a "Cat Questionnaire" (for example, "What cat is an ancient burying place?" (catacomb), and "What cat is a plant of the mint family?" (catnip).

Food for a Halloween gathering is simple and substantial—baked beans with brown bread, cabbage slaw, and coffee; doughnuts with mulled cider, or pumpkin pies à la mode. You'll find among the following suggestions some that are old and some that are new.

Caramel Pecan Tarts.

(Makes 6 tarts)
1 can sweetened condensed milk
2 tablespoons hot water
6 small tart shells
½ cup nut meats (cut fine)
Place the unopened can of sweetened condensed milk in a kettle of boiling water, and keep at boiling point for three hours. (Be sure to keep can covered with water.) Remove the caramelized milk from the can and blend with two tablespoons hot water, beating until smooth. Cool. Pour into baked tart shells, and sprinkle with chopped nuts. Cut pattern of cat from stiff white paper. With a sharp knife, carefully cut cats from pastry, using the paper pattern as a guide. Place on cookie sheet and bake in hot oven (450 degrees). Cool and place one on each tart before serving.

Chocolate Indians.

½ cup butter
1 cup granulated sugar
2 eggs
2 ozs. chocolate (melted)
½ cup bread flour
Dash salt
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
½ cup nuts (broken)
Cream the butter and add sugar slowly. Add the eggs and beat well. Add the melted chocolate, flour, salt, vanilla extract and nuts, blending lightly. Bake in a shallow layer in a well greased pan in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 30 to 35 minutes. Remove from pan and cut in bars while hot.

Harvest Moon Doughnuts.

(Makes 24 doughnuts)
¼ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
4 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup milk
1 teaspoon vanilla
Fat for deep fat frying
Cream butter and sugar. Beat in eggs. Sift together dry ingredients and add alternately with milk. Add vanilla. Roll dough ¼-inch thick and cut with doughnut cutter. Fry in deep fat at 385 degrees until doughnuts are brown.

Sausage Roll-Em-Ups.

4 small pork sausages
4 long slices bread
Prepared mustard
Melted butter

Cook pork sausages until lightly browned. Spread bread with prepared mustard. Wrap the sausages in the bread and fasten with a toothpick. Brush with melted butter—covering outside entirely. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) until brown. Garnish with crisp bacon and parsley.

Taffy Apples.

2 cups granulated sugar
½ cup light corn syrup
¾ cup water
Red liquid coloring (few drops)
12 red apples
12 skewers
Few drops oil of peppermint, cinnamon or cloves

Wash apples thoroughly and dry them. Insert skewer in blossom end. Put sugar, corn syrup and water into a saucepan and cook, stirring until the sugar is dissolved. Continue cooking without stirring until the temperature 300 degrees F. is reached—crack stage.

Wash crystals away from side of saucepan as mixture cooks. Cook slowly during latter part of period so that syrup will not darken. Remove from flame and set saucepan into boiling water. Note: A double boiler may be used for this. Add coloring and flavoring and stir just enough to mix well.

Holding apple by skewer, plunge it into hot syrup. Draw it out quickly and twirl it until the syrup runs down to the stick and spreads smoothly over the apple. Stand skewer in a small glass or cake rack so that apple will not touch anything while cooling.

Apples should be made the day they are to be used because moisture from apple will soften candy and make it sticky. Dipping must be done rapidly or syrup will become too stiff for coating.

The football season is in full swing! One of these chilly Saturdays it would be a grand treat to let the youngsters bring "the gang" home from the game for a football supper.

Desired Extra Bathroom

Need Take Little Space

Few houses are being built today without two bathrooms, or at least a bathroom and extra lavatory. In the modernization of an old house, consideration should be given to this feature.

Plumbing authorities have found that the essential fixtures of a bathroom can be installed in a floor space which measures five feet one way and six feet the other. Space at the unused end of the hallway often may be converted into an extra bathroom, and in some cases an oversized bedroom may be converted into a guest suite by partitioning it and including a bathroom

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, acidity or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

RING THE BELL

An Italian who was working on a railway in Florida had been told to beware of rattlesnakes, but was assured that they would always give the warning rattle before striking. One day he was sitting on a pine log eating his dinner when he saw a big snake coiled a few feet in front of him. Keeping an eye on the reptile, he began to raise his feet from the ground, and as he did so the snake's fangs hit the bark beneath him, no warning having been given. "Son of a gun!" yelled the Italian. "Why you no ringa da bell?"

New and Important Easy-to-Do Fashions

IF YOU take a large size, then 1835 is a pattern you'll thoroughly enjoy, and make up time and again. Excellent for housework, with darted, unconfining waistline and deep armholes, it is so neatly tailored and smart looking that you can receive your super guests in it, too, and wear it for shopping and runabout. For home wear, make it of gingham or percale. For street wear, choose thin wool or flat crepe, and omit the pockets.

Pleats Are Smart.

If you spend most of your hours in an office or at college, then a dress like 1814 is a joyful necessity. It's blithe, tailored, becoming and youthful, with box-pleated skirt and button-front bodice, finished with a crisp little collar to keep it always fresh and new-looking. Make it up in plaid wool or in bright-colored jersey—or in both. It's too good a design to make up only once!

The Patterns.

No. 1835 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material; ¾ yard of contrast; 2½ yards bias fold or braid. No. 1814 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3¾ yards of 54-inch material; ½ yard contrast.

Halloween

Do you remember how the neighbors called us bad, The tricks we did on Halloween, when we were just a lad, How we hung the Jones' gate high upon the pole, And put the Doctors buggy, in the old swimming hole, And carried Grandma Perkin's fence down the road a mile, And scattered Uncle Josh's wood he'd stacked high in a pile, And then we moved on down to Rosenberg's patch, Twas dark, you couldn't see a thing and Slim, he struck a match, We heard Old Rosie coming and we all began to run, Presently we felt the pepper from Rosenbergs gun, How we filled the Widow Murphy's kitchen full of smoke, By plugging up the chimney and she nearly croaked, And how we hid from Clancy, the copper on the beat, Bombarded him with tomatoes from behind the fence across the street, Remember that old dutchman, we nicknamed old Pete, And how he helped us carry, his private Cabin up Main street, And how he laughed and hollered, he thought it such a joke, Until he found it was his own, then I thought he'd croak, Remember how we tied the door knobs to a convenient pillar post, Then rang the door bell, I think I laughed the most, How they'd pull and tug, to open up the door And then we'd cut the rope, and they'd fall upon the floor, In those days we thought it fun, just to see one fall, We never thought of injury to anyone at all, We swiped the sheets from Mother's bed, they were snowy white, We had to have a goblin on such a special night, And when we'd play the ghost, we'd moan and scream and groan, Until we were scared to death, to go back home alone, I could go on forever and tell of things we once did, Your father done the same things, we done, when he was a kid.
